Oral presentations: skills to help you survive or even shine!

John Dixon

Giving an oral presentation is a daunting prospect for some. Even the more confident can find presenting a difficult skill to master. However, we must all stand and deliver at some stage, whether to share ideas informally with colleagues or help pitch for a new project to a major company. We discuss how to deal with nerves, rehearse and keep to time, use our voice and body language, make a presentation have impact, and deal with questions and difficult people. Join us to voice your views, ask questions or just listen. We hope to persuade you that delivering an oral presentation can be an enjoyable and worthwhile opportunity and not an ordeal to hide from!
